The silence is absolute.

It's oppressive. It weighs down on the two men seated on the couch.

Words have been spoken; words that are so powerful, so life changing.

Words that hang heavy in the air.

Time stands still.

Until one of the men breaks the spell.

"Say something."

Brown eyes meet hazel. One set is full of surprise, the other full of hope.

"I don't know what to say."

"Tell me you love me too."

A smile.

"I love you too."

The kiss consumes them.

No more words are needed. After 21 years the words have finally been spoken.
